The decision “was the result of careful deliberation” that had taken into account the statute section 830.4(d), “the California statute that creates our safety officer force and indicates it is not authorized to carry firearms.” Hastings will continue to contract with the SFPD for an armed officer to patrol the campus weekday evenings at an annual cost of $110,000.

A review of the statistical analysis of the Web survey in which 8 of 10 responders were current law students showed that among the officers, either with firearms or Tasers, was favored by 54.7%, although surprisingly only 48.9% said that the presence of armed security would be enhanced the presence of firearms on campus. This marks the third failed attempt by Hastings safety officers since 1992 to gain the right to carry firearms on duty.

After the board meeting, Hastings Chancellor and Dean Frank Wu said the policy decision on firearms “was the result of careful deliberation” that they can’t carry guns.

Feds threaten neighborhood’s last pot shop

BY TOM CARTER

Hospitalized marijuana dispensary owner Michael Welch has the wolf at his door in January while his pleas to the feds for help to spare the Tenderloin’s last pot shop go unanswered. Welch is bedridden at UC Hospital recovering from complications from an aorta blood clot that nearly killed him.

If they close us down, I think all of us (eight employees) will be homeless,” Welch said in a telephone interview. “It’s hard to fight from a hospital bed.”

Sanctuary is a small, low-key dispensary with fewer than 1,000 patients, the majority of them suffering from HIV/AIDS, cancer and hepatitis. As part of its compassion goal, it has a giveaway program for destitute patients and donates HIV/AIDS medical supplies to hospitals and helps the homeless find housing.

Haag’s letter came after others from California’s four U.S. attorneys earlier this year to select dispensaries throughout the state that also threatened to prosecute pot club operators and seize the buildings where they operate. California’s Proposition 215 legalized the use of medical marijuana in 1996 as have 15 other states, plus Washington, D.C. But growing, selling or using grass is still a federal crime.

On the building, this 16- by 16-inch sign says the shop, where time is running out.

Needy seniors get what they want for Christmas

BY TOM CARTER

Only and needy Tenderloin seniors will receive gifts of their choosing, and it’s a little bit of Christmas excitement, too. Last year, 200 San Francisco seniors received presents, up 50 from 2009, the first year Curry was involved.

Home Instead Senior Care, based in Omaha, Neb., is a network of international franchises began in 1994. It describes itself as “the world’s largest provider of nonmedical in-home care and companionship services for older adults.” The San Francisco office expects higher numbers of gift requests this year.

“One law office, Bingham McCutchen, called and doubled last year’s number of ornaments they wanted for their employe- ees,” said Jan Couvillon, a senior peer advocate at Home Instead Senior Care.

On Dec. 2, the Walgreens at Market and Ninth had 13 names left on its list. Requests ranged from a rain poncho and handker- chiefs to shaving cream and Depends for women. But the sign along with explaining the program neglected to give directions on how to participate. The giveaway arrives as seniors’ dollars continue to shrink. According to the Annual Survey of Senior Costs from the Senior Citizens League, seniors have lost 52% of their buying power since 2000, Home Instead said.

In seven years, Home Instead says it has delivered 1.5 million Christmas gifts to needy seniors in the United States and Canada.

Where to put a portable-potty in the TL?

Tenderloin voter turnout 32.1%, next to last in the city

Vote-by-mail edges citywide average; Lee beat Avalos by two precincts

By Marjorie Beggs

In the Tenderloin’s 17 election precincts, 15,822 residents were registered to vote in the Nov. 8 election. When the numbers were in, less than a third of them cast ballots, far below the citywide turnout of 42%, but a shade higher than Bayview-Hunters Point, the neighborhood at the bottom of the turnout barrel at 32%. The most voters were West of Twin Peaks, 59%.

Within the Tenderloin, the highest-turnout precinct was the easternmost 3606, the blocks bounded by Powell, Taylor, Market and Post, where 36.7% of the 775 registered residents voted. The lowest turnout — 27.5% of the 1,440 registered voters — was in precincts 3617 and 3618, Leavenworth to Larkin, McAllister to Eddy.

The neighborhood as a whole hit 32.1%.

In the ranked-choice voting for elected office, TL residents weren’t as sanguine as the rest of the city by interim Mayor Ed Lee, who ran against five other candidates and finished first in 71% of precincts citywide. Only nine of the 17 Tenderloin precincts went for Lee as their first pick. Seven choose Supervisor John Avalos, and one, precinct 3616, the area just east of City Hall, bounded by Van Ness, Leavenworth, Market and McAllister, opted for Dennis Herrera.

In the other electoral races, TL residents mirrored fellow San Franciscans and chose those with the highest name recognition: Supervisor Ross Mirkarimi for sheriff and former Police Chief George Gascon to be district attorney.

Tenderphoners also followed the rest of the city — indeed, the country — in continuing the upward trajectory of voting by mail and early voting, rather than casting ballots in person on election day at their assigned precinct.

A whopping 58% of TL votes were “vote-by-mail,” a term used for both mail-in ballots and early voting at City Hall that in “vote-by-mail,” a term used for both mail-in ballots and early voting, rather than casting ballots in person on election day at their assigned precinct.

Among the eight measures on the November ballot, Proposition H had the potential to affect the many families and children in the Tenderloin. It would have changed how students are assigned to schools, making neighborhood proximity the highest priority.

In the Tenderloin, kids are kept close, and parents and grandparents walk them protectively to Tenderloin Community School at 627 Turk St. — the only public school in the neighborhood. But Prop H, which needed 50% plus 1 vote to pass, narrowly failed, here, as it did citywide.

In the 17 TL precincts, nine voted the measure and eight voted aye; in many precincts the difference was only about 20 votes. A week after the election, Prop H appeared to have passed, 50.07% to 49.93%. But seven days later, the final election numbers came in at 50.04% against and 49.96% for.

Opponents of H included all the school board members, state Sen. Mark Leno, and Supervisors Eric Mar and Jane Kim. In their ballot guide arguments against the measure, they called it “well-intentioned [but] fatally flawed” because it would be costly to implement, was poorly written and was “unnecessary.”

- New home sweet home

Central City Extra is making this a two-month edition, December 2011 and January 2012. The holidays are a hard time to work, lots of people take time off and lots of people party this time of year, and it’s too tough to squeeze in another edition.

So, the first Central City Extra of 2012 will hit the streets in February.

San Francisco Study Center, nonprofit publisher of the Central City Extra, is moving to 944 Market St. in January after 39½ years in the Grant Building at 1095 Market.

Coming with us are Office of Self Help and S.F. Mental Health Clients Rights Advocates, which have been a part of the Study Center for many years.

The February issue will be published out of our new home.
Feds crackdown leaves San Francisco’s pot clubs in limbo

The crackdown has outraged Assemblyman Tom Ammiano who authored a bill that failed to legalize recreation marijuana and state Sen. Mark Leno. In an Oct. 19 statement, they demanded the federal government end the attack on pot dispensaries.

Instead of supporting state efforts to effectively regulate medical marijuana in accordance with Prop. 215, the Obama administration seems committed to recriminalizing it, Ammiano said.

In a recent December meeting with the U.S. attorney, Ammiano said he cleared the air, especially about the San Francisco dispensaries that were in complete compliance with local and state regulations. Yet, there remains tension between state and federal regulations, he said.

“I appreciate her (Haag’s) concerns and the challenges that we face,” Ammiano wrote in an email to The Extra. “And it is clear that our federal representatives need to weigh in to protect the rights of California patients. Moving forward, my priority is to end this unjust federal enforcement and create effective statewide regulations for medical marijuana to reaffirm our state’s rights.”

Supervisor Jane Kim is equally concerned. There are 13 pot clubs in District 6 as of Dec. 1, according to the Department of Public Health. But only Sanctuary is alive in the Tenderloin. In an email to The Extra Dec. 15, Kim wrote:

“Our office has been working closely with medical marijuana small businesses to address these ongoing federal actions, and I joined my colleagues on the Board of Supervisors in passing a resolution condemning the federal crackdown on MCD’s. We are very cognizant of the impact that neighborhood closures are having on patients in District 6, particularly those struggling with HIV/AIDS.”

The scare has caused an estimated 2,500 dispensary employees statewide to lose their jobs since late September, 50 in San Francisco, a Nov. 25 Chronicle story said, quoting figures from the United Food and Commercial Workers’ national medical cannabis division. Three of San Francisco’s 26 dispensaries closed recently. Med Thrive Corp.-op, 1935 Mission St., Nov. 12; Mr. Nice Guy, 174 Valencia St.; and The Dispensary, 996 Geary St., Nov. 11. With the shuttering four years ago of Tariq Alkazzar’s Mason Street dispensary because the building owner, Skyline Realty, objected to the license, that leaves Sanctuary the last Tenderloin dispensary standing. A Pelosi aide in Washington told The Extra she got a copy of Haag’s letter from the landlord Nov. 28, he desperately reached out for help.

“Let Haag, called her and her stuff and mailed her,” Welch says, “and she hasn’t answered.”

None replied, he said, adding that he was hospitalized within days and could have missed a communication.

Pelosi had written Welch just after his dispensary was licensed in March 2008, saying she supports medical marijuana. Moreover, she said she was “a strong supporter” of a House bill then called The States’ Right to Medicinal Cannabis Act, which would have prevented “federal interference with state laws on the use of medical marijuana.” But it failed.

Her view differs slightly from then President-elect Obama’s support in late November 2008. He favored states legalizing the use of medical marijuana, but said it should be regulated by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration. He had earlier said he was against the Justice Department pursuing federal prosecution.

A Pelosi aide in Washington told The Extra she got a copy of Haag’s letter and hasn’t changed her position.

A damning point in Haag’s letter says the dispensary is subject to “enhanced penalties” because it operates “within a prohibited distance of a playground.” Tenderloin Children’s Playground on Ellis Street. The south end of Sanctuary’s building is near the playground’s north side, an apparent city law violation. The Board of Supervisors adopted the nation’s first-
When you're not working? Sundays, I shower, shave, eat breakfast, get dressed, do a little cleaning, then go to Mass at St. Paul’s at 29th and Church. Then I go from there to the cemetery — that’s one of the things I don’t miss, putting fresh flowers on my wife’s grave. Then I do my food shopping, go home and cook dinner. About 6 o’clock, I’m at Artichoke Joe’s in San Bruno to play poker.

You go there Sunday nights? I go Thursdays and Sundays. One night I won $359, the most I ever won, and one night I lost $107, the most I ever lost. I have a system. In playing poker you have to use a lot of judgment. You have to almost read the other guy’s mind, and when the other guy beats me, it’s because I misjudged for that particular time. Once in a while I bluff. I got caught several times. But I got my system — when I do win, I win nice, and when I lose, I don’t lose much.

You said that next year you’ll have been a barber for 79 years. I don’t think there’s anyone else I know who’s worked 79 years doing nothing but just barber. That’s a heck of a long time.

...ever comprehensive pot club regulations, introduced in April 2005 and passed in November. It banned new clubs operating within 1,000 feet of a school or community center. Sanctuary opened March 2005 and Welch says he was “grandfathered in.”

Welch said his lawyer, Patrick Goggin, has advised that this is a land issue, but Welch isn’t clear what the implications are.

Even so, Welch is hoping his history as a model owner can save Sanctuary at its present location.

He has never had a complaint since opening, he says, and he’s sensitive to the spirit of the law. The storefront is tastefully understated on the street behind a wrought iron gate that has a small plaque listing its three awards. One is the Harvey Milk Club’s award for HIV/AIDS compassion.

Among Sanctuary’s philanthropic projects over the years have been finding housing for a speech-impaired mom with four kids after her husband committed suicide and making 400 peanut butter and jelly sandwiches twice a week to deliver to children with families in shelters. It has bought baseball tickets for veteran groups. (Welch is a former Marine.) Over the past three years, the dispensary has sent three loads of HIV medications to St. Elizabeth Hospital in Malawi, Africa, worth $300,000, Welch says.

A concern of DPH has been smoke escaping from dispensaries because the smell offends some people.

“We have no smoke that can escape,” Welch says. “Patients use our vaporizer.” Also known as a volcano, the device turns weed into vapor contained in a bag and can be sucked through a mouthpiece.

The dispensary insists customers not resell what they buy, or they will lose their privileges. Same goes for smoking outside, Welch says. “And they (the feds) are coming after us when there are people down to the bus corner and smoking crack,” Welch says, perturbed. “It seems unfair.”

Sanctuary’s lease runs until 2020 and has been under a new owner since last year. Welch and his crew earned points with the previous owner by finding a dozen solid renters for the 14 units upstairs in recent years.

“He doesn’t want us to go,” Welch says. “But she (Haag) is out for blood.”

music was evident. Augustine recalled him at the age of 2 saying, "Mom, I gotta sing you a song," then fetching a harmonica from behind the couch, opening a microphone, climbing on a chair and singing her the Beatles’ "Love Me Do." "When he was about 9, he brought me a cassette of Johnny Cash," Augustine said. "He had a really deep voice, like Johnny Cash." Jim Morris died when his sons were teens, Augustine said, of a heart attack. "He didn’t say much, but he had that soulful look in his eye," she said after seeing he found the body. "That was devas- tating," Augustine said.

Mr. Morris’ father, Jim, separated from Augustine when Jesse and his older brother Jamison were toddlers. He would take them on weekend while their mother was work- ing. Augustine worked evenings at the Old Telegraph Square Hotel on Treasure Island. For the San Francisco and also worked in the schools in Serramonte.

Mr. Morris did attempt suicide as a teenager, and attended alternative schools in Serramonte.

In the past, Jamison Morris said, his Mr. Morris had a long history of addiction to medical interventions through- out his life. "He was better when on his meds," she said. "His lows were pretty rough, and he’d lose his job. "He’d have a job for a while and be a great salesman," Augustin Morris said. He resembled Johnny Cash, and that Jim’s soul and energy.

"He had it rough in the beginning," Augustine said. "He was a quick study, good with musical stimuli. He knew his lines. He was a funny little guy, walks with two canes himself. "I miss him running around here."
